INTRODUCTORY

To the Citizens of Charlotte:

We take pleasure in presenting to our patrons the CHARLOTTE DIRECTORY for 1875-76. It has been compiled with great care and at great expense, and we trust that, on examination, it will be found correct and satisfactory. It is our intention to issue the DIRECTORY in 1877, more extended and varied in its contents, keeping pace with your rapidly growing city.

We remain yours, truly,

BEASLEY & EMERSON,

A SKETCH OF

CHARLOTTE,

—:O:—
BY CHARLES R. JONES.

—:O:—
BY WAY of proper introduction of the Work which is now presented to the business community of Charlotte and vicinity, and which is intended more to be a commercial history of Charlotte than any thing else, it has been thought eminently proper to introduce the reader to the objects of the book by a short, clear and concise history of the livest city in the State of North Carolina, if not in the South.

The writer is profoundly sensible of the magnitude of the undertaking, and regrets that sufficient time is not allowed to dwell more at length upon the subject under consideration. At some future time the proprietors propose to repeat the effort to get up a Directory of the thriving little city of Charlotte, and at that period a better time and opportunity will present itself for enlarging upon the ideas and thoughts now, for the first time hastily and imperfectly thrown together. With these few remarks as an apology the writer commits himself to the task before him :

Eighteen hundred and seventy-five! Magic words. They carry with them the history of Charlotte since the 15th day of January, Anno Domini 1767—the indelible marks made on the pages of modern annals for one hundred and eight years, and which are pregnant with import to day. They carry us back to the traditions of the past, when the surrounding country, now the most prosperous of any portion of North Carolina, was inhabited by the red men of the forest; who gathered around their camp fires, in the dim twilight at evening, to smoke the calumet of peace, or to take counsel together and prepare for warfare upon the pale face, who had invaded their hunting grounds. We write to day of the place “Where on the red man’s faded trail,

The engine smokes and raves,
And city lots are staked for sale.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-five—these talismanic figures carry us back beyond the time when there had been no Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, and before a generation of freemen had been born on the Western Continent. They recall the time when Charlotte was a cross roads stopping place for the weary horseback traveler, or where the sturdy Scotch-Irish yeomenry, who in a few generations changed the face of the country from a howling wilderness to a fertile, well regulated, prosperous agricultural and commercial community, and where these early settlers met periodically to participate in general muster of the militia, or in the absence of railroad and telegraphs, and with mail facilities little better than none, to talk over the events of the day.

The city of Charlotte was named in honor of Charlotte Augusta, daughter of Queen Caroline and George IV., and who was one of the most beautiful and accomplished princesses of the Georgian dynasty, and in early times it was situated by nature at the intersection of the principal highways of travel. One road leading from the mountain country of Western Carolina, to the markets of Fayetteville in this State, and Cheraw, Camden, and even Charleston, in South Carolina, at what is now known as Independence Square, at the intersection of Trade and Tryon streets, this old thoroughfare was crossed by a highway equally as important, leading from the settlements in the then far West, eastward to the towns of Salisbury, Greensboro, Hillsboro, Raleigh, Newberne, &c., and it was early noted for the success of those of its inhabitants who, in its earliest days, chose to engage in tavern keeping.

The surrounding country was settled by the Scotch Irish, and early took the lead in the erection of schools and churches, and long before the present city of Charlotte was laid out as a town, an academy, called Queen’s College was located here, which was the chief seat of learning at that time in all the Southern States. And although Queen’s College is now only remembered through the dim light of tradition, that noble institution of learning which sheds its benignant light throughout this whole section of country at Davidson College, may be said to be its lineal successor, and which is ably aided in the cause of education by the Carolina Military Institute, the Charlotte Institute for young ladies, the City Graded School, presided over by Rev. J. B. Boone, and the schools of Capt. W. A. Barrier, and others.

The County of Mecklenburg was formed from the County of Anson in the year 1762, and in 1767 the town of Charlotte was located. The original deed conveying the tract of land upon which the City now stands, was signed by George Augustus Selwyn, by his agent, Henry E. McCulloch, the 15th day of January, 1767, and contained three hundred and sixty acres, in the following words:

“To all to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting:

Know ye that George A. Selwyn, by Henry E. McCulloch, for and in consideration of the sum of ninety pounds lawful money, and for other good causes, me thereunto moving, have bargained and sold unto Abraham Alexander, Thos. Polk and John Frohock, as Trustees and Directors of the town of Charlotte, and their successors, a certain tract of land lying on the waters of Neil's and Garrison's Creek. Beginning at a white oak about 150 yards from Thos. Polk's line running thence North 40 degrees West 240 poles to a pine, then South 40 degrees West 240 poles to a hickory, then South 40 degrees East 240 poles to black oak sapling, then to the beginning, including the cross-roads, containing 360 acres.

To have and to hold to the said Abraham Alexander, Thomas Polk and John Frohock, to them and their heirs or successors in office or assigns forever.

Soon after the town was laid out a small log building was erected at what is now the intersection of Trade and Tryon streets, and immediately in the center of what is now known as Independence Square. This building was long used as a court house and for church purposes. In 1871, the war between Harmon Husbands and the Regulators of Alamance county and Governor Tryon, Provisional Governor of what was then known as the Colony of the Carolinas, commenced, and soon found active sympathy among the patriotic people living in the vicinity of Charlotte. This sympathy in behalf of the Alamance Regulators became so great, and the desire to absolve allegiance to the mother country, became so strong that a series of meetings of the citizens of the county was held during the fall of 1774, and the Spring of 1775, to consider what was best to be done. Tradition informs us that at a meeting which convened in Charlotte on the 19th day of May, 1775, and which was protracted until the 21st, solemnly and formally declared Independence from the British Crown, and which is now claimed to be the first Declaration of American Independence ever made on American soil. This Declaration was probably hastened by hearing of the news of the battle of Lexington and Concord, in Massachusetts. These battles were but a repetition of the battle of Alamance, in North Carolina, and had no object of Independence in view, but the sequel proved that the colonists were ripe for revolution, and that the people of Mecklenburg were first to catch the spirit of inspiration, and proclaim to the world their devotion to principle, pledging their "word, their fortune and their most sacred honor" in their maintenance.

There have been those who would rob the old North State of her merited glory in regard to this immortal action of the patriots of 1875. North Carolina herself has given birth to sons who would tear the burnished jewel from the diadem of their old mother, but we who live among the traditions of the past century; who, uninfluenced by the sympathies of partisanship, are willing to take the facts as they stand recorded on the written and unwritten pages of history, cannot, dare not disbelieve that Dr. Brevard wrote the first declaration of Independence, which was ever inspired by the love of liberty in an American heart, and that this declaration was duly signed by the delegates assembled and enthusiastically ratified on the 20th day of May, 1875, by the people then and there assembled. Writing as we are almost on the eve of the Centennial Anniversary of that most eventful and important occasion, with the experience and traditions of a hundred years, and at a time when extraordinary preparations are being made to observe the anniversary with proper honors, none but an insane person could doubt it. But this is neither time nor place to vindicate or support this or that theory. Be ours the duty to give facts and pass on.

The town of Charlotte was during the long seven years war for Independence, which followed the declaration, at one time in the hands of the British, who met with such opposition among the people, that one of their chief officers, in derision designated them "hornets." This appellation to-day so far from being a term of contempt, is regarded by the people as one of honor and patriotism, and as such must be handed down to future generations.

At this late day it is almost impossible to go back and gather up the history of Charlotte further than for fifty or sixty years, except on such rare and important occasions as the 20th May, 1875, and it may be said that the history of the place was uneventful for the next fifty years succeeding that date, but fifty years in a town in North Carolina often makes a very material difference, and Charlotte proves no exception to the rule

CHARLOTTE FIFTY YEARS AGO.

The chief men of the town of Charlotte fifty years ago, were Joseph Wilson, John Irwin, Wm. Davidson, Wm. Smith, Samuel McComb, Dr. David R. Dunlap, Eli Springs, Robert J. Dinkens, James Cowan, Thomas Vail, Dr. Robert McKenzie, Wm. Carson, John McQuag, Dr. Wm. Long, Green Kendrick, Samuel Love, James Torrence, Wm. J. Alexander, Thomas Wilson, Allen Baldwin, Dr. Samuel Henderson, James Hutchinson, A. Graham, John Sloan, Caleb Norwood, James T. Asbury, R. M. Sterling, Wm. Rudisill, Edward M. Bronson, Robert Sloan and David Parks.

These with their families and servants, constituted nearly if not quite, the entire population of the town of Charlotte.

The Court House stood in the middle of the public square, formed by the intersection of Trade and Tryon streets; it was a square brick building, hipped roof (the old log building which existed in 1775, had been removed) terminating with a cupola on top. The whipping post, stocks and pillows, stood in the middle of the street between where Walter Brem's hardware store, and Burwell's drug store are now, in full view of the judge's bench, where he could see his sentence executed. For many years the Sheriff and Clerks of the Superior and County Courts, and Register of Deeds, kept their offices at their houses in the country. The Sheriff was James Wilson, who lived about six miles from town on the lawyer's road. The Superior Court Clerk was Gen. George Graham, who lived two miles and a-half west from town, where Mr. Stewart now lives. The County Clerk was Isaac Alexander, four miles south-east of Charlotte in the Sharon neighborhood. The Register of Deeds was Wm. B. Alexander, nine miles north of Charlotte. All these offices were kept in the country until the Legislature passed an act requiring them to be kept at the Court House. Then it was that the upper story of the Court House was cut up into offices, and thereby spoiling the only good ball room in town, as all the public balls or dances were held in the second story of the Court House, and all the preaching was done in the lower story in the Court room. Ministers of all denominations, when they came to Charlotte, preached in the Court House. There was not a single church in the place, nor was there a minister of the gospel living here. The nearest preacher was Rev. Samuel C. Caldwell, who officiated at Sugar Creek, in the old log church that stood near the public road where the old grave yard is and very near where the gate enters the grave yard. Mr. Caldwell was buried under the spot where the old pulpit stood. That was the place where the few church-going people of Charlotte generally attended, when there was no preaching in the Court House. The first church built in Charlotte, stood on the ground where the 1st Presbyterian Church now stands. That too was used by all denominations of ministers—and it was built without reference to any denomination—and remained in that condition until it was finally put in charge of the Presbytery.

On what is now known as Second Ward, there was an old wooden building standing on the south east corner of Trade and Tryon sts. known as the old Patterson or McGibony store-house. It was a two-story building, and not occupied at that time. Some years afterwards it was fitted up and occupied as a store by William Smith, who was also post master. The next house on Tryon was an old two story building with piazza extending into the street and was occupied by James Cowan, as a store. Next to that and joining it, on the lot now occupied by the Central Hotel, stood another old two story wooden building occupied and kept as a hotel by old Thomas Houston. This hotel some years afterwards was known as the Watson House. The next house was a one-story, with sharp gable end to the street, elevated about four feet from the ground, this was occupied by an old batchelor, John McQuay, as a grog shop, where nearly all the big fights, (and there many of them,) originated. The next house below was known as the widow Emerson's Tavern, with a long piazza and balcony extending over the side walk, or where the side walk is now, it was raised some three or four feet from the ground, and was entered from the street by four or five steps. This house stood on the ground or vacant lot now owned by John L. Morehead, on Tryon street. The next house stood on the corner of what is now known as Tryon and 4th street, where Carson & Grier's store is, and was occupied as a hotel by Samuel McComb; it was a long house two stories, painted white, with piazza in front extending the whole length. This was considered the principal hotel of the town. The next house stood on the lot below, and was an old one story building, owned and occupied by an old Dutch woman named Mrs. Jarret. The next lot below was vacant. The next house stood on the corner where Dr. Bratton now lives and was known as the Dr. Thomas Henderson house. It was a two story building, painted white, and was the last house on that side of Tryon street. The ground below that on which A. B. Davidson now lives, was entirely vacant, and called the old College Green, where the military held their general musters.

On south-east corner of Trade and Tryon streets there was a small house used as an office, that stood on the street half-way down what is now the Central Hotel property. That was the last house on that side of Trade street except to Caleb Norwood's tanyard, and which is now the dower of Mrs. Brown. The old buildings were burned on the 16th April of the present year, and may be said to have been the last house of which we write, to succumb to the ravages of time and circumstances. These were all the houses standing in Second Ward, except a few stables in the back lots. The old Queen's College Spring was then at the foot of a very steep hill, on the lots now occupied by Mrs. Gifford, and the gas works. The hollow has been filled up, and the spring walled up and converted into a well, which is now used by Mrs. Gifford.

A very large old frame building stood on the lower end of the Henderson lot, just above where Mrs. Gifford now lives, which was said to be the remains of the old Queen's College, moved there by Dr. Thomas Henderson, not more than 50 feet from its original position and used by him as a stable and barn.

At the north west corner of Trade and Tryon streets, known as the "Irwin corner," was the same house that stands there now; it was occupied by John Irwin, but has undergone many changes, both by addition and subtraction. The large room now occupied by Dr. John McAden, as a drug store then composed Mr. Irwin's store room, counting room, dining room and parlor. On the next lot below Tryon street known as the "David Parks lot," was a small one story brick store-house built and occupied as a store by James Torrence. This was the only brick house in Charlotte, except the Court House. The next lot was owned by "Merchant Billy Allison," as he was called, who kept a store in the little house now occupied as a shoe maker shop by Mr. Cohn.

The next lot, now known as the "Owens property," was owned and occupied by Archibald Prew, who was a revenue officer and United States tax collector, and had a large store about where James Harty's dwelling house stands. The next lot, where Mrs. John Springs now lives, was owned and occupied by a man named Mitches, carriage maker. The next house was the jail where the present jail now stands. It was a two story wooden building, painted red; there was a rough fence around it nor was there any of the lot cleared, except a small spot where the jail stood. The balance of it was grown up in bushes and large trees. The Statesville road turned off from the Salisbury road just about where the Parsonage stands, and passed in rear of the jail, thence a straight course out by where Frank Snider lives. The next house was on the lot where Ransom Gray now lives. It was a long one story log house, with a partition in the middle. One end was used as a dwelling and the other end as a hatter-shop, and belonged to a man named Thomas Capps.

There was no other house on Tryon street to the lot now owned and occupied by Mrs. Rufus Johnston, where there was a blacksmith shop which stood on the Salisbury road, and a log dwelling house and well some distance in the rear. This was owned and occupied by a man named Dick Mason, who owned all the land on that side as far as the branch where the Lincoln Depot now is.

At the Irwin corner, and down on Trade street West, the first house below the Irwin lot was the Cowan house, a long wooden two-story building, with piazza and balcony extending the whole length, covering the ground where the sidewalk is now; then outside of that in front, about the width of the sidewalk, or some eight or ten feet distant from the piazza, stood a row of large China trees, extending the whole length of the house. This house occupied the ground now covered by Richard Moore's tin and hardware store, Frankenthal's store and James Harty's China Store, and was known as the "Cook Tavern," where General Washington lodged on his return from his Southern tour, after the Revolutionary war.

The next house was on the lot now occupied by Dr. C. J. Fox, but it was of much more recent date than the other part of the town. It was built by Dr. Robert McKluze, who lived there and had a large practice in town and surrounding country.

There was no other house in what is now known as Fourth Ward, except Allen Baldwin's, who lived in a small house on the lot where Dr. Cureton now lives, and not far from the spot where Dr. Cureton's house now stands. Baldwin was a tanner, and his tan yard was where Mr. F. A. McNinch's house now stands. The old graveyard is situated in this ward, where all the old citizens of the town were buried, and among them was Col. Potk, who, it is said, read the Declaration of Independence on the 20th of May, 1775.

On the corner of Trade and Tryon Streets, now occupied by granite row, stood an old building, owned and occupied by Wm. Davidson. The house was a two-story wooden building, painted; the corner room of the first story was used as a store-room. The next house was a small wooden building at the lower end of the same lot, and stood on the spot where Dal. Rigier's confectionery now stands. This house had been used for many years as a store house, and then used as a banking house—a branch of the old Newbern Bank, Wm. Davidson, Cashier and Manager; Duncan Campbell was the clerk and Teller. This was the first bank established in Charlotte. The next adjoining lot on Tryon street, where the First National Bank, and McAden's building now stands, was owned and occupied by Joseph Wilson, a distinguished lawyer, and the father of Mrs. Wm. I. Alexander. On the lower side of this lot, on the spot now covered by the banking room, was a store house, one story, occupied subsequently by David Parks, when he first came to Charlotte. It was also the same store house in which Green Kendrick did business. Next below that, and adjoining this store house, was a red house owned by Wm. Carson, in which Wm. Smith carried on the mercantile business, for many years: Wm. Carson also had a store there afterwards. In the rear of this store house was a building used by Wm. Carson, as a hatter shop, where nearly all the hats worn in the county were made, and where all coon skins and other furs were sold. The next lot, now owned by Col. Wm. Johnston, was then owned and occupied by a man named McBride, and afterwards by Dr. Long, who moved back to Salisbury. The next lot below was on the corner of Fourth and Tryon streets, and was owned by Wm. Smith, who lived there with his family until he died. On the lower side of the same lot on Tryon street, stood Wm. Smith's tailor shop, where he employed several hands and carried on an extensive business. On the spot where Col. H. W. Guion's house now stands, was a very old one-story log house, weather-boarded with very broad plank; the floor was on a level with the street. This house was occupied by old Mrs. Wishart, the oldest person in town. The next house was an old log blacksmith shop that stood with the end to the street, on the lot where Wm. Boyd now lives, below Mr. Guion's lot. On the same lot a little back from the street, was a small log house, in which the widow of Dr. Bivens then lived and taught a little school. The next and last house on Tryon street, was a long one-story house, with a piazza in front, that stood on the corner of 3d and Tryon streets, where Mrs. Young's house now stands, and was occupied by a tailor named Duff Walker.

Go back to the Southwest corner of Trade and Tryon streets, and down the side of Trade, the first house after the Davidson corner house on the same lot was a two-story log house used as a kitchen, that stood on the spot now covered by Koopmann's store. On the lower end of the lot where Robt. F. Davidson's furniture store is now, was a frame house with end to the street, used as a stable. On the lot where Jas. H. Henderson's store is now, was a small one story house, said to have been Joseph H. Wilson's law office, when he lived on the McAden lot. The next and last house on that side, was an old blacksmith shop, that stood on the corner of Trade and Church streets.

There were no other houses in the third ward except a gin house that stood on the corner of the lot where James H. Henderson now lives, and a few stables and barns.

Such was Charlotte only a half century ago, and we have dwelt somewhat at length upon it, in order that the contrast which we shall present hereafter of Charlotte as it is now, will be the more apparent.

CHARLOTTE BECOMES A CITY.

At the beginning of the late war between the States Charlotte had grown to be quite important in the sisterhood of towns throughout the South. There were good and important reasons why this should be so, prominent among which was the fact that it was situated in the heart of a rich and prosperous agricultural community. There is another fact which is known to day only by a few, which in times past, has added very much to its prosperity. The city may be said to be located in an amphitheatre, and is surrounded with a circle of hills or elevations, or more properly still of gentle undulations in the surface of the topography of its surroundings. The soil is rich in gold bearing properties, and within one mile from the public square gold mining has been carried on, which has netted something over two millions of dollars, most of which has gone to make up the wealth of the city in times past, but of this we shall speak more fully hereafter. Besides the two reasons just named, we may state that the character of the people which Charlotte and vicinity has produced, may be added as a guarantee of past, present and continued prosperity. They are industrious and active to a fault, which under ordinary circumstances always brings success.

THE UNITED STATES BRANCH MINT.

Within a radius of twenty miles from Charlotte there are not less than one hundred gold mines, and we have the best authority for saying that up to 1848 (before the important discovery of the California gold fields) they produced one-half of the gold coined in the United States. Not more than a dozen of these mines are now in operation. The establishment of the branch mint here became a necessity, and in the year 1835 an Act of Congress provided for its erection. This action on the part of Congress was the outgrowth of a long and persistent agitation in the gold producing districts of this State and South Carolina. The history of this agitation dates back as early as 1830, when the numerous body of miners in the counties of Mecklenburg, Gaston, Cabarrus, Rutherford, Davidson, and Montgomery loudly complained of the extortions practiced upon them in selling their gold to the merchants or to the banks, and of the delay incident to the transportation of the bullion to Philadelphia for coinage, four months oftentimes elapsing before returns were received. These complaints induced the General Congress at the session of 1830 to appoint a special committee to investigate the subject. This committee through its Chairman, Gideon Glenn, made an exceedingly interesting and valuable report. Among other statements given was this: that the annual production of gold of this State was half a million dollars, the cost of this production being estimated at $150,000; a mint was recommended.

The history of gold production in North Carolina, however, dates back to the year 1799, in which year Conrad Reed, son of John Reed, of Cabarrus County, found a piece of native gold "as large as a smoothing iron;" its value was not then even guessed, and it was put to the commonest uses, and finally sold for $350. This same locality, the Reed Mine, was for many years prolific in large masses, the largest indeed known till the discovery of gold in California and Australia. The following table of nuggets found at the Reed Mine from Wheeler's History of North Carolina is appropos:

In the meantime large areas had yielded the precious metals in unexampled abundance, and fresh fields were perpetually discovered in the more Eastern counties and westward to the mountains, to the North in Virginia and Southward to Alabama, while the enterprise of the miners led them to the discovery of the veins, the sources of the riches they had hitherto extracted from the "Placers."

To the "old inhabitants" this "flush" time of gold mining is still a fruitful theme.

The effort to secure a Mint was, however, unsuccessful till the date given above, but private coinage was practiced by the Bechtlers of Rutherfordton. These coins, or more properly "tokens," were honestly prepared and had a large circulation, but were too poorly and rudely made either to wear well or to obviate counterfeiting. They were of the denominations of $1.00 $2.50 and $5.00. At present they are rarely met with.

The establishment of this Mint by the Act of March 3d, 1835, was secured only by a species "log rolling," by which branch Mints were also established at Dahlonega, Ga., and at New Orleans.

This Branch was opened for business on December 4th, 1837, and had an encouraging amount at once. The succeeding years also showed a large amount of work.

In July, 1844, the Mint was burnt at mid-day. The institution barely survived this disaster, for its enemies striving to make it a party as well as a public matter, strenuously opposed the rebuilding of it. The unremitting endeavors of the Hon. D. M. Barringer, who then represented this District in Congress, finally triumphed over these obstacles, and the years 1845-46 witnessed the erection of a new structure (the present building) at a cost of about $40,000.

From this period till the war, the history of this Branch was uneventful. Its business was not large, as we are now accustomed to speak of Mint operations, or as we see them practiced at Philadelphia or at San Francisco, nevertheless this center was an important source of the circulating medium of the country.

At the last session of the XLIII. Congress that body declined to make any further appropriation for carrying on the business, or even keeping the buildings in order, and it is feared that its future usefulness may be seriously impaired, from the same want of attention on the part of our law makers.

THE COMMERCIAL INTERESTS OF CHARLOTTE.

Up to, and even to the close of the late war, the commercial interests of Charlotte were of much smaller significance than they now are. Ten years of trade which has poured into her lap since the last gun was fired, on the 24th day of April, 1865, has added materially to the wealth, influence, prosperity and prospects of the city of Charlotte.

There is no channel of commerce which has added so much to our wealth as the cotton interest; and in mentioning it our only regret is that owing to the limited time now allowed us, and the limited space at our command, remarks under this head must be necessarily incomplete and imperfect. He who would write up a subject so voluminous, and so important in the past, present and future of the city of Charlotte, must possess a fertile mind and a ready pen. It was said before the war that “King Cotton” sat in the sanctuary, and ruled the commercial destiny of men with a magic wand, and his presence and his power has been certainly felt in Charlotte.

Up to the year 1852, the cotton raised in the vicinity of Charlotte found a market by being hauled to Fayetteville, Camden, Cheraw, or to Charleston, by wagons; or found a market among a small number of manufacturers. At that time the then village of Charlotte was introduced to the commercial world by the completion of the Charlotte and Columbia Railroad, which was the first railroad ever completed to Charlotte. This iron chain connected at once with the markets of the world, via Charleston, Wilmington and Portsmouth, and over the Wilmington and Manchester, and the Wilmington and Weldon railroads to the northern markets, in which condition it remained until the completion of the North Carolina Railroad in 1855, after which, in the year 1859, the Western Division of the Wilmington, & Charlotte & Ruth. Railroad was extended from Charlotte to Lincolnton, which railroad, now the Carolina Central has, within the past six months, been completed from Wilmington to Charlotte, and the Western Division extended to Buffalo, in Cleveland county. In 1860, the Atlantic, Tennessee and Ohio Railroad, originally intended to run from the seaboard, on the Atlantic Coast at Georgetown, South Carolina, to Jonesboro, Tennessee, was chartered, and the following year, was completed between Charlotte and the village of Statesville, on the Western North Carolina Railroad, and in the county of Iredell, and since the war, it has been placed upon the great thoroughfare of trade and travel from North to South, by the construction of the Richmond and Atlanta Air Line Railroad, connecting Charlotte with Atlanta, Georgia, thus making the city of Charlotte one of the greatest railroad centres in the Southern States, which added to the fact, that it is situated in the midst of one of the finest agricultural, mineral, and productive regions known in the United States, and abounding in facilities for manufactories blessed with a salubrious climate, equally free from the malarial diseases of the lowlands, and the influenzas of the mountains, and peopled with a hardy, intelligent and industrious population, making it a nucleus upon which one of the most powerful inland cities will ever be constructed upon this continent. But to return to the cotton interest, which is here superior to all others.

The rapid growth of the city since the war is owing greatly to the fostering of this element of our wealth by the citizens and merchants of Charlotte.

The scope of country of which Charlotte is the commercial cotton centre, or more properly the commercial metropolis, includes a scope of country covering fourteen counties in North Carolina and at least eleven in South Carolina. Our railroads have been zealous in fostering the cotton interest here, and step by step, under the various influences the city, as a cotton market has advanced until she has reached the exalted position of being the first and principal cotton market in the State. This is no idle, presumptive boast, and one of which every citizen of Charlotte is justly proud, and is proved by the report of the city officials, whose business it is under our municipal regulations to attend to this matter alone.

It is pleasant for us to contemplate that no city in North Carolina, or even in the South, has commenced and grown with a steadier growth of power and usefulness than that of which we write. Fostered by the cotton industries we have been able to build up such railroad facilities as to take a place in the front rank in commerce among the cities of the South. Situated as we have said in the centre of a highly intelligent and thrifty population, the city has always been intimately connected with agriculture, as the principal mart of our staple, and when in future years; when we shall be able to utilize the God-given privileges with which we are blessed, and convert her into a manufacturing town, as will most assuredly be done, we may justly look forward to a brighter career of prosperity than has ever dawned upon us. The cotton interest always has and always will underlie the great pillars of our success, and that we have prospered; that the farmers have been encouraged to do double duty by the high prices of the staple in this market; that upon the whole we have a cheerful retrospect, and a still more hopeful outlook for the future is owing, in the main, to the fact that this industry has been sustained and encouraged by energy, perseverance, and pluck on the part of both producers and buyers of the staple, which has in a measure made the city of Charlotte what it is to-day.

Every industry has its history, and it is to this we now turn. About a quarter of a century ago (and this brief period is still fresh in the minds of many whose names may be found in another part of this book), the cotton trade was first commenced in Charlotte. Up to that time whatever cotton was produced in the country which was not consumed immediately through the aid of the old-fashioned loom, wheel and cards was forced to seek a market either in Charleston, Cheraw, Camden, Fayetteville or Petersburg. When the completion of the Charlotte and Columbia Railroad took place in 1852, for the first time in the history of Charlotte she had an outlet—a highway to the sea. Three years later and the iron chain which connects us with Norfolk, Va., was finished, and a stimulus given to the cotton trade which no other advantage could have conferred. Situated at the terminus of both roads, competition between them at once enabled the cotton dealer here to pay the very highest possible price for the staple. Since that time railroads have been added to, until we have the net work of roads alluded to in a former part of this sketch. Over the Richmond and Atlanta Air Line Railroad, the great short route between New York and New Orleans, and which penetrates some of the richest country tributary to our market, Charlotte has received an immense impetus to the cotton trade. The Atlantic, Tennessee and Ohio Railroad has poured a considerable trade into our market. The upper section of the Carolina Central, leading from Lincolnton to Charlotte, has been equally instrumental in increasing the cotton trade here. Countless numbers of bales have been brought to Charlotte from the direction of Chester and Rock Hill, in South Carolina, over the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad, while the North Carolina Railroad gives the people all along its line, from Charlotte to Lexington, however paradoxical it may seem, a market in Charlotte for their cotton.

In 1855, the annual sales of cotton on this market was less than three thousand bales. In 1860, on account of this railroad influence, the trade had gradually become of more importance, and had reached twelve thousand bales. The four years of the war (in this as in nearly all industries), paralyzed all this interest, except to furnish such orders as were needed for home consumption, and the market gradually weakened until it almost ceased to exist.

With the crop of 1866, business in this line was again resumed, with about the same amount on the market as in 1860—12,000 bales—since which time it has increased annually until for the fiscal year ending August 31st, 1874, the actual sales reached forty thousand bales. The present year, beginning September 1st, 1874, and ending August 31st, 1875, it is thought with a smaller average crop, the sales will not fall far short of fifty thousand bales, some thirty-five thousand bales at this date—May 1st—having already been offered and sold on this market. These figures show a marvelous increase in the trade, which, when properly known, must certainly still further augment the sales.

CHARLOTTE AS A WHOLESALE MARKET.

Contrary to the general laws of trade, Charlotte has become one of the leading and important grocery and wholesale markets of the South. We say contrary to the general laws of trade, because groceries and goods at wholesale are generally very heavy articles of merchandise, and the people are in the habit of buying such goods in quantities at our sea-ports, where dealers have the advantage of shipping facilities. Water carriage has, in all ages, been the cheapest mode of transportation, and it will probably ever remain so. Every inland city then, in business where freights are heavy, must have some advantage to enable her to compete successfully with her more fortunate sisters, or she will fall behind in the race for preferment. While Charlotte cannot boast of a sea-port, she is the terminus of several of the leading railroads, which go to make up the iron chain that links the destiny of our common country into one of general interest. Ships laden with the famed wealth of the Indies do not pour their treasures into her bosom until they have passed through other hands; or, if the merchandise has been bought and imported by our own merchants, as it is in many instances, it must pay a small tribute to the port of entrance, but by being able to get through rates, the merchants of Charlotte are able to sell such goods at a very slight advance on prime cost—so slight, indeed, that Charlotte has gained the reputation, and justly too, of being the cheapest wholesale market in the South away from the seashore. She enjoys the enviable advantage of being located at the terminus of railroads leading directly to Charleston, Norfolk and Wilmington, bringing these shipping points almost to our door, at through rates, and thus opening up the markets of the world to the vast trade which centers at this point. The wholesale trade before the war was comparatively a small business, but to day it is an immense one, and promises to become larger still.

Prominent among the wholesale interest is the boot and shoe business. This market furnishes a very large proportion of the boots and shoes which are used in Western North Carolina and upper South Carolina. Many of the country merchants in this part of the State find it to their advantage to buy these goods here in preference to ordering them from the more northern markets. We are able to confirm this statement by a recent publication in the American Shoe and Leather Reporter, of Boston, which in a tabular statement showed that Charlotte bought many more shoes in Boston than any city in North Carolina, and more than twice as much even as Wilmington, and that there were only four other cities in the whole South, whose name commences with the letter "C," that bought more boots and shoes than Charlotte.

The most extensive boot and shoe house in Charlotte is that of Messrs. Smith & Forbes. This house has been in business for more than twenty years, and last year did a business of at least $144,000, which promises the present year to be largely increased. They have recently removed into a large, spacious and elegant building on Trade street, erected especially for their use, which is not excelled in the South. Their stock is large and varied, comprising a full assortment of everything in their line. This may be expected as they carry a stock valued at from sixty to eighty thousand dollars.

Messrs. Sample & Alexander are the only manufacturers of boots and shoes in Charlotte, except a number of private shops. These gentlemen are now working twenty-nine hands, and are carrying a stock of something over forty-five thousand dollars worth, and are doing a large wholesale trade. They too, have recently removed into a new building, on Trade street, and are occupying two stories and the basement of the building for their business.

Messrs. Wade & Pegram are carrying on the largest strictly retail boot and shoe store in Charlotte. Successors to the well known house of S. B. Meacham, they do a very large and successful business.

We may truthfully say that the boot and shoe business is the largest business of any other one line carried on in Charlotte, and it is probably worked up harder. Competition is so strong between the competing houses that the margin for profit is very close, which makes it all the better for buyers.

THE SCHOOLS OF CHARLOTTE.

No sketch which we could write of Charlotte would be complete which would leave out her schools, and although we know that the time and space at command will not allow justice to be done to the subject, we cannot pass them by unnoticed. In a former part of this sketch we have said that Davidson College is the "lineal successor" of Queen's College, which was in existence here at the Revolutionary War, but in several other schools which are located within the city, that noble institution has powerful allies in the cause of education.

THE CAROLINA MILITARY INSTITUTE, which was founded several years previous to the late war, was planned by the immortal STONEWALL JACKSON, and first presided over by General D. H. Hill, now the editor of the Southern Home. It was regularly opened in 1859, Gen. Hill being assisted by Gen. James H. Lane, and Col. Charles C. Lee, both of whom subsequently sealed their devotion to their country, by giving up their lives in their country's cause. The war found it among the flourishing institutions of the land, but it, like nearly every other enterprise, withered as if poisoned by a blast from the upas tree, at the touch of the hard iron finger of war.

Every effort to resuscitate the school after the war failed, until the Fall of 1873, when Col. John P. Thomas, of South Carolina, conceived the idea of establishing a school which would embrace within the scope of its aims, the young men of both North and South Carolina, and his labors have been crowned with a gratifying success. The curriculum embraces a complete graduating course, and at once puts the Institute in the front rank among the colleges of the South. It now has about one hundred and twenty-five students, and a corps of Professors which are an ornament to any institution.

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES.—A portion of the citizens of Charlotte, anxious to have a female school of high character, in 1858 built and equipped this spacious and elegant building, which fronts Ninth and College streets, and which for beauty in architecture, convenience of arrangement, and adaptation in every respect to the purposes for which it was intended, is equalled by few institutions of the kind, and probably surpassed by none in the Southern country. The Institute was under the management of Rev. R. Burwell until the fall of 1873, at which time it was taken charge of by Rev. Dr. R. H. Chapman and Mrs. Verina S. M. Chapman, as principals, with an able corps of assistants. The faculty now consists of Rev. Dr. R. H. Chapman, A. M. D. D., Professor of Ancient Languages, Mental and Moral Philosophy, and Mrs. Verina S. M. Chapman, in charge of English, Belles Lettres and French, principals; Prof. Stephen Frontis, Mathematics, Ancient Languages and Philosophy; General Gabriel J. Rains, Physical Science and Mathematics; Prof. and Madame DeCastro, Modern Languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music. The Board of Trustees are J. H. Wilson, Esq., President, Col. Wm. Johnston, Col. W. R. Myers, Hon. W. F. Davidson, Dr. M. M. Orr, and Col. John L. Morehead. The course of instruction embraces a collegiate, as well as a preparatory department, and graduates are furnished with diplomas of as high grade as can be obtained in the Southern States. On the rolls are now numbered some ninety students. The present principals have labored hard to make the Institution all that a first class school for young ladies ought to be, and deserve the patronage of the surrounding country in a much more extensive manner than they now receive. Orphans of Confederate soldiers, and the daughters of ministers of all denominations are at all times invited to secure the benefits of the English course in this school free of charge, and the full course if the teachers of accomplishments concur in the desire of the principals on this subject. Thorough, quiet, steady progress, rather than exciting exhibitions, is the law of the school. "To be and not to seem" is the chosen motto of the Institute.

THE CITY GRADED SCHOOL, now a flourishing Institution, with three hundred and fifty students, was established under the auspices of the Township School Committee in 1873—Rev. J. B. Boone, Gen. Rufus Barringer and Mr. W. H. H. Houston. Rev. Mr. Boone was appointed Superintendent and still holds the position. During the last session six hundred dollars was received from the Peabody Fund towards the maintenance of the school, and this year one thousand has been received from the same source, and not less than six hundred dollars have been contributed by private citizens during the present scholastic year. Funds have been received from the public school fund of the State to an amount of about one thousand dollars per year. Altogether the various sums contributed have placed the Institution on a solid and firm foundation.

This school is yet only a preparatory one, but it is in contemplation to add a high school department. It is divided at present into ten grades under seven teachers. Commencing from a small beginning, it has progressed until it has become a necessity which is invaluable as a medium of education, particularly among that class of our citizens who are mechanics, or are persons with small salaries, and its beneficial effects have been so salutary that it can hardly be discontinued. While it is rather out of the province of this sketch, we cannot conclude our remarks in regard to this school without an appeal to the citizens of Charlotte to provide buildings suitable to the necessities of the school. The benefits of this school cannot well be overestimated, but it cannot serve the purpose for which it is intended, and for which its most ardent friends could hope, without proper buildings, such as would be an honor to the city of Charlotte, and a useful auxiliary in carrying out the purposes of education, adequate to the age in which we live.

MACON SCHOOL, in charge of Capt. W. A. Barrier, is the next in importance which claims our attention. This school has been in operation about two years. Its design is to prepare boys for College, for the Freshman and Sophomore classes. There are at present only thirty-five students in attendance, as the membership is select and limited. The curriculum embraces a full academic course in the ancient languages, and the higher branches of English and mathematics, including arithmetic, algebra and geometry. Its object fills a needed want in the city of Charlotte, and deserves all the patronage which it has received.

THE BIDDLE MEMORIAL INSTITUTE is a normal school for the education of colored persons for the ministry. It is presided over by Rev. S. Mattoon, D. D., long a missionary in Africa. The names of the faculty appears elsewhere in this book. It was originally endowed by a Miss Biddle, from whom it takes its name, and by contributions of private citizens.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS. There is probably no city in the South where education is held to be of as much importance as in Charlotte. In addition to the schools above alluded to is the schools of the Misses Long, Miss Hattie Moore, Mrs. L. D. Scott, Miss M. Nesbit, Miss Martha Moore, and Miss C. R. Watt, to which may be added the colored Peabody schools, for the education of colored children, and all of which are in flourishing condition.

INDUSTRIES.

Charlotte is a commercial city, but under the head of industries there are several establishments which desire especial mention.

WILKES' FOUNDRY was originally the old Confederate Navy Yard, where, however paradoxical it may seem, much work was done in fitting out the Confederate Navy, during the late war.—Originally dedicated to Mars, Mr. Wilkes bought out the establishment and veritably moulded the sword and spear into the pruning hook and the plow share, emblems of peace and implements of agriculture. He has succeeded in building up the largest iron foundry in North Carolina. Here all classes of the iron foundry business is done, Mr. W. employing not less than fifty hands. This establishment has a rival in the foundry of Mr. W. F. Cook, who does a very large and successful business in casting plow-shares and in making and dealing in other agricultural implements. Both are doing a good business, and we only wish there were a dozen such establishments, instead of two.

Under this head may be very properly introduced the branch establishment of the Erie City Iron Works, located on College Street. These works at Erie, Pa., have long been noted for the superiority of their machinery, and in order to accommodate their increasing trade in this section the company have located a branch establishment here which offers every facility of the present house.

OTHER MANUFACTORIES.

The prospect for business in Charlotte, after the war, and after the completion of the railroads which have been built since that time, all centering here, caused a large influx of population. The demand for dwelling houses and places of business, made the building of a large number of houses a matter of necessity, and to supply the demand for building material Mr. F. W. Ahrens started a steam planing mill, and sash, door and blind factory, which, being incapable of supplying the demand, was followed by the establishment of the same kind by Jonas Rudisill. These were subsequently followed by the establishment of Mr. Joseph Asbury. All three of which are now in a flourishing condition, and so far as we know are meeting the demands of the people, employing not less than one hundred and fifty hands.

The Dixie Pump Works deserves a passing notice, as Mr. E. M. Andrews claims the best pump manufactory in the Southern States. His business employs a large force, and his pumps are rapidly succeeding all other pumps throughout this section of country.

THE NEWSPAPERS.

Surrounded as the city of Charlotte always has been, by an industrious, intelligent, hospitable and progressive people it is considered a fine field for newspapers, and now supports more of them than any city of its size in the Southern States. It was our purpose in the commencement of this sketch to give a history of each newspaper which exists now, or has ever existed in Charlotte, but both time and space precludes such a possibility now, and we will merely remark en passant, that the newspapers of Charlotte, are all in a thriving condition, and give much promise of future usefulness.

THE DRUG BUSINESS.

Charlotte sells the drugs for a large section of the country, and supports five drug stores. The city and surrounding country is healthy, and the climate salubrious, and it becomes a matter of speculation as to what becomes of all the drugs annually introduced or compounded in Charlotte, but the fact is explained when it is recollected that we supply (principally) the drugs for not less than twenty-five counties in North and South Carolina.

POPULATION.

The census of 1870, taken, we are informed, by an individual who knew little or nothing about Charlotte or its people, failed to make a true exhibit of the number of people who lived here, and consequently the population has been little better than a matter of speculation. From calculations made by the publishers of this directory, which may be relied on, the population of the city is not less than nine thousand.

CONCLUSION.

At the outset, the writer intended this sketch to be much more comprehensive than it is, but the time in which it had to be prepared, together with the heavy pressure of other business, has made it necessarily incomplete. The most of the material has been gathered, and the sketch has been written inside of forty-eight hours, at a time when our whole time was demanded for our other duties. Much of it has been written amid the confusion incident to the editorial rooms of a daily newspaper, and in the absence of one of the editors, actually giving the writer treble duty. Many of the pages have been thrown to the printer before the ink was dry, with no opportunity for revision. If it answers the purpose for which it was intended, that of introducing the stranger to our beautiful little city, we shall be satisfied. If it fails to be that which our friends would have it they must take the will for the deed.
